7. Description

The Browns Valley Carnegie Library, built in 1915-16, is located on a large lot at the southeast corner of Broadway Avenue and Second Street at the east end of Browns Valley's main commercial street. The building is situated in a mixed commercial and residential neighborhood and is flanked by two churches standing to the east and west. The architect of the library is not known. Construction of the $5,480 building was started by McClure Construction Company of Minneapolis, but the library was finished by local builders. The library is a modest, one story Classical Revival building with a three bay main facade and two bay sidewalls. The exterior walls are faced with soft light brown and cream colored brick, laid to form decorative patterns on all facades. The building has striated brick piers forming a slightly projecting entrance bay which is topped by a triangular parapet. The entrance has double leaf doors covered with iron grills, a wooden sign at the transom level, two wrought iron lamps attached to the walls flanking the entrance, and three windows with geometric patterning above the transom area. The library has brick corner pilasters, a simple metal cornice beneath a brick parapet wall, and rectangular window openings now filled with large glass panes and glass block. The date "1915" is incised in an open book above the cornice at the center of the main facade.

The library is in good condition and has been altered very little. Exterior changes have included installing glass block and thermopane windows during the 1960's and covering the foundation with stucco. During the 1940's the interior walls were repainted and the woodwork refinished, and during the 1960's the interior was renovated again when the circulation room ceiling was lowered and the walls covered with masonite panelling. At the same time, a public meeting and activity room was created in the previously unfinished basement.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Browns Valley Carnegie Library, built in 1915-16, is historically and architecturally significant as one of Browns Valley's most architecturally significant buildings dating from the early twentieth century and as a building which illustrates the efforts of the Andrew Carnegie Corporation to provide free public library services and architecturally sophisticated public library buildings to small rural Minnesota communities.

Browns Valley is a small town located on the South Dakota border in west central Minnesota. The community's first public library was a small facility which opened in November of 1908 on the second floor of a commercial building. The library was organized by community members and stocked with materials donated by local residents and provided by a small circulating library operated by the St. Paul Public Library. The Browns Valley library was next housed in the local public school. By 1913 increasing demand for library services prompted a group of interested citizens led by the local Catholic priest to approach the Andrew Carnegie Corporation for funds to construct a modern library building. In February of 1914 the village council voted to accept a Carnegie offer of $5,500, to allocate $550 annually for library maintenance, and to provide a site for the building, a lot then occupied by the city's circa 1870 Episcopal church. Village submitted its building plans to the Carnegie Corporation for approval and the contract for construction was awarded to low bidder McClure Construction Company of Minneapolis. The building project began during the summer of 1915 when McClure moved the Episcopal Church two lots to the east and prepared the library site. After construction of the library was well underway, a contract dispute began between McClure Construction and the library board, and the building was eventually finished by construction workers hired locally. The library opened officially in 1917.

Efforts by Browns Valley residents to provide a public library for themselves extended beyond the work of those who initially contacted the Carnegie Corporation. Civic groups including the Progress Club, the Interlochen Club, and the American Legion contributed to the library project by hold fundraising events, assisting in cataloging books, and soliciting private donations to the library. The library was administered by the village council until 1931 when the first library board of directors was created from representatives of various local organizations. Community support for the library continued through the 1950's and 1960's when a group of volunteers helped recatalog the library in 1953 and when members of the local Citizens Club finished the basement of the building to create a public meeting and activity room.

The Andrew Carnegie Corporation, which funded the Browns Valley library, financed 1,679 libraries nationwide between 1886 and 1919, many in small communities like Browns Valley whose resources could not otherwise support construction of a library building. In many cases, Carnegie libraries constructed during the early twentieth century continue as nearly sole providers of educational services to adults in rural Minnesota, and stand as among the most architecturally significant buildings in many small rural Minnesota towns. This is true in Browns Valley, where Carnegie's relatively modest grant of $5,500 provided the facilities and impetus for vital community library services which continue today.
