Describe present and historic physical appearance.

The Neodesha United States Post Office (c. 1935-1936) is located at 123 N. Fifth Street in Neodesha, Wilson County, Kansas (pop. 3,414). The one story, flat roofed red brick building has an eastern facade orientation. The building measures approximately sixty-six feet from north to south and fifty-two feet from east to west. A transomed double door pierces the center of the building's facade. Steps lead up to the doorway. A pair of large, multi-paned windows flank the doorway. Limestone surrounds decorate all three openings. A smaller, multi-paned window pierces the outer bays of the facade. Similar fenestration is employed on the lesser elevations. The building sits on a limestone block foundation and is surmounted by a limestone cornice. This post office is an example of a smaller class C or D standardized design type that was repeated throughout the country during the 1930s.

The mural "Neodesha's First Inhabitants" was installed on the north wall of the lobby above the postmaster's door and the two bulletin boards that flank it. This is the traditional location of Section artwork in the smaller class C and D post offices. "Neodesha's First Inhabitants" is a tempera on pressed wood board mural that depicts the friendly relations between the Osage Indians of southeastern Kansas and the early white settlers. On the right side of the canvas Chief Little Bear waves to Dr. T. Blakeslee, a physician responsible for much of the peacefulness between the two cultures. Chief Little Bear holds a peace pipe in his left hand and waves to Blakeslee with his right. Little Bear's wife and daughter stand behind him. Blakeslee, mounted on horseback, waves back. On the left side of the canvas the Indian tribe works busily in front of their teepees, carving canoes, making pots, tanning hides, drying meats, and carrying wood. A field of grain grows close to the left corner of the canvas. Rows of corn slope down the rolling hills toward the white settlement. In the background, Steffen paints two log cabins and a stagecoach travelling along the wagon road. Steffen employs a primary palette of greens, browns, and pinks for the mural.

The mural was installed on July 25, 1938. It measured 11'10" by 5'4" before installation and has a small moulding frame around it. In May, 1971 Marion Iserman of Denver restored the mural. The paint was flecking off because the mural was done on wood board instead of canvas, which the Section recommended. Iserman cleaned the painting with mild detergents and touched it up. Surprisingly, the condition of the mural was assessed as slightly defective in August, 1973. In February, 1983, Anton Rajer, Assistant Curator at the Nelson Atkins Museum in Kansas City, Missouri cleaned and restored the mural. It is in good condition.

The lobby floors retain their original tiles and the wainscotting retains its original panelling. The other woodwork, such as the postmaster's door, the surrounds, and the bulletin board surrounds, which are originally varnished, has been painted. The original hanging light fixtures have been replaced with almost flush mounted fluorescent lights. The lobby does not have a projecting vestibule.
The Neodesha United States Post Office (c. 1935-1936) is being nominated to the National Register as part of the Kansas Post Office Artwork (1936-1942) Thematic Resources nomination at the local and state levels of significance under criteria A and C for its historical association with the Treasury Department's Section program and for the artistic significance of the mural that it contains. The mural, "Neodesha's First Inhabitants", was painted by New York City artist Bernard J. Steffen (1907 – ?) in 1938.

"Neodesha's First Inhabitants" is a tempera on pressed wood board mural that depicts the friendly relations between the Osage Indians of southeastern Kansas and the early white settlers. On the right side of the canvas Osage Chief Little Bear waves to Dr. T. Blakeslee, a physician responsible for much of the peacefulness between the two cultures. Chief Little Bear holds a peace pipe in his left hand and waves to Blakeslee with his right. Little Bear's wife and daughter stand behind him. Blakeslee, mounted on horseback, waves back. On the left side of the canvas the Indian tribe works busily in front of their teepees, carving canoes, making pots, tanning hides, drying meat and carrying wood. The Indians are portrayed as extremely industrious, exemplifying the hard work ethic. Steffen idealizes them through their intent concentration and muscular bodies, making them larger than life. A field or grain grows close to the left corner of the canvas. Rows of corn slope down the rolling hills toward the white settlement. In the background, Steffen paints two cabins and a stagecoach travelling along the wagon road. Steffen employs a primary palette of greens, browns, and pinks for the mural. "Neodesha's First Inhabitants" is representative of the historically based, representational social realism that was funded under the Section program.

The extent of community involvement in the development of the subject material and presentation of the mural is not clear in the Neodesha...

case, however, the Section reassigned the commission to Steffen after local pressure to hire a native son was expressed. In addition, Steffen's father was the Neodesha postmaster at the time. Steffen was awarded the commission on the basis of competent sketches submitted in a Section competition. Steffen received the contract for the mural on March 28, 1938 and the mural was installed on July 25, 1938. "Neodesha's First Inhabitants" was installed on the north wall of the lobby above the postmaster's door and the two bulletin boards that flank it. It measured 11'10" by 5'4" before installation and has a small moulding frame around it. Steffen received $520 for the commission. The Neodesha Post Office is an example of one of the many smaller class C or D type post offices that received Section artwork in Kansas.

Steffen was a native son who had moved to New York City to pursue his painting career. He studied painting under S. Macdonald-Wright, Earnest Lawson, Boardman Robinson, and Thomas Hart Benton. Steffen later made his home in Woodstock, New York.
