Architecture of Olof Hanson, 1895-1901 : Jonathon L., House

The Jonathon L. and Elizabeth H. Wadsworth Noyes House is a detached two story dwelling situated on a corner lot. It is a wood frame structure with a limestone foundation, clapboard siding, and a hipped shingled roof. The house displays two one-half bays on the main (west) elevation and three bays on the secondary (south) elevation. All four sides of the roof support wood shingled dormers of varying sizes and complexity. The Noyes House is styled with Queen Anne and Shingle influences. The prominent Queen Anne influences include the steeply pitched hipped roof, the asymmetrical window treatment and the two story cutaway bay. The prominent Shingle style features include the sparse decorative detailing; slender, unadorned wooden porch posts; wide porch with fanning corner; shingled dormers; and the engaged three story bay-tower on the south elevation.

The first story of the main facade consists of a front entrance in the "center" bay; a high fixed horizontal window in a partial projecting bay to the north; and a southerly bay window with the typical configuration of a picture window capped with a stained glass transom in the center flanked by double hung windows. The most architecturally striking feature of the house is the very fine wraparound one-story porch which fans around the southwest corner of the house. The porch displays classical influences in the detailing and rhythm.

The second story of the main facade consists of a collection of bayed double hung windows and a horizontal fixed leaded glass window placed above the entrance. The front hipped dormer, like the other three dormers is covered in wood shingles, and displays a small porch-like projection.

The south elevation displays a central three story bay which transverses the roofline and defines the south dormer, also finished in wood shingles. The back (east) elevation, because of the slope of the site, allows for a walkout basement doorway and high exposed limestone foundation walls.

The only alteration to the original structure is the one-story double garage addition to the north on the west elevation. Although attempts were made to make this addition compatible with the main structure (note the continuation of the front porch roof line) the expansion introduces an intrusive, although not irreversible, change to the front elevation.

Architecture of Olof Hanson, 1895-1901 ; Noyes, J.L. and E.H. Wadsworth, House

The Jonathon L and Elizabeth H. Wadsworth Noyes House is significant as part of the collection of Olof Hanson designed residences built between 1895-1901. The house is significant as one of the most intact examples of Olof Hanson's residential architecture. The house was built for Noyes, a long time friend of Hanson's, who served for thirty years (1866-1896) as the superintendent of the State School for the Deaf. Noyes also served for 32 years on the board of Trustees of Carleton College, twenty-one of which he served as President of the Board.

The house displays artistic merit combining a variety of architectural styles in vogue at the turn-of-the-century. The massing of the structure follows the principals of the "Classic Box" with two story bays added to conceal the basically rectilinear plan. The dormers display classic Shingle Style influences in both variety, shape and finish. The one-story porch which defines the entrance on the main (west) elevation, shows Queen Anne influences in spacing, rhythm and shape, and Shingle Style influences in post and balustrade detailing. Of all the architectural features, this exceptionally fine wraparound porch with its fanning southwest corner, providing a panoramic view of the Straight River Valley, is the most outstanding. The Noyes House retains its original footprint and massing with the exception of the reversible one-story garage addition to the north on the west elevation. The house also retains the original exterior finishes, facade treatments, fenestration and roof profile.

This structure is recognized for its importance to Faribault within the Quality of Life context as developed in the 1986 Faribault's Historic Contexts Final Report, and further refined in 1988 in Phase II, Evaluation and Registration of Faribault's preservation planning process. The Quality of Life context encompasses the community's aesthetic development as demonstrated through the built environment. The context describes the activities, institutions and structures which represented the community's aspirations for physical beauty and culture as expressed through craftsmanship, art and architecture.
