DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Gifford House is a two-and-one-half storey wood structure. It was built in 1887 by J. W. Darden and designed by architects DeVoss and Carr from Heber Springs, Arkansas. Darden owned a sawmill; hence perfect lumber from virgin pine timber was used in construction of the house. The boards used are largely free of knots.

The exterior walls are clapboard; the house rests on a native stone foundation. Two chimneys with corbelling extend from the high gabled roof. Windows and doors feature architrave trim surmounted by shaped lintel with cornice. One-storey bays extend from both the north and south elevations. The bay on the north elevation features a shed roof. The bay on the south elevation is topped by a hip roof.

The dominant feature of the facade is a two-storey veranda. The pediment of the veranda features centered paired windows surrounded by scalloped shingles. Bargeboard in diamond and ribbon patterns spans the space between the porch posts. Decorative brackets extend from the porch posts to the bargeboard on both first and second-storey levels. Flushboard surrounds the front entry.

The L-shaped Gifford House contains eight main rooms. One unusual feature of the interior is the presence of two separate upstairs sections of the house. A dish cupboard between the dining rooms of the two sections has openings into both rooms. Also unusual for a house built in 1887, the ceilings are just eight feet in height. All the interior doors downstairs have workable transoms.

Only two alterations have been made to the Gifford House, both in 1947. A bathroom was made out of one end of the center hall downstairs, and the L-shaped porch on the west elevation was screened in. Originally this porch had bargeboard identical to that on the front portico.

The Gifford House stands in good condition surrounded by 160 acres of pine trees. It has been well preserved by the five generations of Giffords who have occupied it.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Gifford House, near Rosebud, Arkansas, is a two-and-one-half storey structure built in 1887. It is one of the oldest structures in the area and is significant to the locale as a reminder of the two families who have owned it. Architecturally the Gifford House is significant in its uniqueness and detailed workmanship. It is probably the most architecturally interesting house in the area.

J. S. Darden was born in Tennessee in 1833. After working in a blacksmith shop in Missouri, he moved to White County, Arkansas in 1865. Just a short time later he began his sawmill and flourmill business. By 1887 Darden had been successful enough in his business to construct a house on the property he owned. He hired architects DeVoss and Carr from the nearby town of Heber Springs to supervise the work. From his own sawmill Darden took the finest cuts of lumber. The virgin pine used in constructing the house was largely without knots. Darden became wealthy and invested his money in the land surrounding his house. By 1890 he owned over 2,000 acres of land.

In 1908 Darden sold the house and 160 acres surrounding it to J. S. Gifford. Gifford was a retired banker from Republican City, Nebraska. Five generations of Giffords have lived in the house. The present owner, J. S. Gifford, Jr. has lived in the house since 1946.

The architecture of the Gifford House represents the tastes of a successful sawmill owner in the 1880's. The house is historically significant because of its association with families prominent in the history of that area of White County.
