Farmers Society Hall, completed 1828, is Greek Revival with heavy columns. White clapboard, steepled St. Paul's Episcopal Church, 1822, has its original furnishings. Old Stone Church, made of field stone, is an early frontier building. Other churches have furnishings from their original buildings.

Furnishings of the old houses are mostly heirlooms. Many valuable pieces of furniture were crafted by Pendleton cabinetmaker Knauff.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Pendleton is to South Carolina's frontier Up Country what Charleston, Beaufort and Georgetown are to the Low Country. From Indian days onward, especially through the Revolutionary period and the century following, Pendleton has played a part in state and national development. As a historic district, Pendleton is not confined to a town boundary; the overall area has a concentration of significant urban and rural, buildings, structures, and objects unified by past events and providing important visual history.

For many years, <sup>P</sup>endleton was the center of business, culture and government in the northwestern part of the state. Its position at the crossroads of the Cherokee Trading Path into the Low Country with the Catawba Path into Virginia made it accessible to traders from both directions; its climate attracted wealthy coastal planters.

Once part of the Ninety Sixth District, later in Abbeville County and then in Washington District, Pendleton came into being with the Legislative Acts of 1789. Commissioners appointed to locate a court house for Pendleton County purchased 885 acres from Isaac Lynch, the land deed dated April 8, 1790. Part of this tract was divided into streets and village lots, the remainder into "outlying" lots.

The community was noted for fine cabinet and carriage makers; for ironworking; for the raising of fine livestock. Prominent craftsmen were William Henry Drayton Gaillard, W. F. Knauff, and the Sittons.

One of the first newspapers in upper South Carolina was published here prior to 1800 by John Miller, who migrated from London in 1782, went to Charleston as printer and publisher of the "South Carolina Gazette" for a time, came to Pendleton in 1785. Site of his shop is one block from the village green.

Figuring prominently in Pendleton's beginnings were notables like General Andrew Pickens, Revolutionary hero, Indian fighter and peacemaker. John C. Calhoun had his offices in town; so did James Bonham of Alamo fame. The district provided Civil War generals, diplomats, government leaders, jurists, craftsmen, business leaders.

Within this historic district is the site of the 1785 Indian treaty which opened up the northwest section of the state, and by which the Indians also surrendered rights to large parts of Georgia, Tennessee and North Carolina. General Pickens led negotiations for the treaty, site of which was the first Pickens home. This house was replaced about 1800 by the present Hopewell, also the home of Pickens' son and grandson, who served as South Carolina governors.

8. Significance (Pendleton)
<ul> <li>Well-preserved specimen of frontier workmanship is Old Stone Church, field stone building completed in 1802 on land given by Printer Willer, who is buried here along with Generals Pickens and Robert Anderson, and other notables. Still standing in this section is Woodburn, summer home of Charles Cotesworth Pinckney. To the east of town is Wontpelier, impressive 1845 home of Samual Maverick' wealthy merchant-planter whose ignorance of range customs was responsible for the term "maverick" as applied to unbranded cattle. Across the highway is Achtabula, circa 1828, built by the Gibbes family of Charleston. This Up Country plantation house with captain's walk and separate kitchen building has been restored by the Poundation for Historic Restoration in the Fendleton area. Town places noteworthy historically and/or architecturally include:</li> <li>1. Farmers Society Hall originally designed as court house, oldest farmers hall in continuous use in nation. Farmer Society, founded 1815, finished hall in 1828 and hus met there ever since. Members included Thomas Pinckney, its first president; John C. Calhoun, Thomas Pickens, Charles Octesworth Pinckney, Thomas C. Clemson, etc.</li> <li>2. Lowtner Hall circa 1790, erected by Lord Lowther of Angland as hunting lodge; expanded mid-1820's, became home of historian and U. S. daplomat in China, William Henry Treescot.</li> <li>3. Flam Sharpe House built 1802, by William Steele, first postmaster in Fendleton, successively home of John Willer, Jr., and his son-in-law, Sharpe.</li> <li>4. Bowwood House circa 1800, simple frame structure was first meeting place of Pendleton Farmers Society in 1815. Frior to 1822 used for service of St. Fault's Fpicoopal Church. Later boarding house for Fenale Academy.</li> <li>5. Belens House circa 1800, home of Richard Simpson, who wrote Clemson will.</li> <li>6. Marshalsaa built 1830, home of Dr. Milliam Seabrook Jenkins, regimental surgeon in Confederate Army.</li> <li>7. Mil Casa circa 1800,</li></ul> and Pickens as court house towns, Pendleton today contains the charm, interest, and atmosphere of a varied past. Its people preserve with pride its historic homes, buildings, and sites.

ADDENDUM TO THE PENDLETON HISTORIC DISTRICT NOMINATION

The Pendleton Historic district derives its primary significance from the antebellum structures which reflect Pendleton's early history. Also included in the district are some late 19th century structures which demonstrate Pendleton's more recent growth and are, in appearance and feeling, compatible with the earlier periods.
