Since its completion in 1811, New York City Hall has been the heartbeat of the bustling seaport which became the capital of the Free World. The Hall has watched American armies passing in review, going to battle or coming home from the Nation's wars, from 1812 to Korea. For more than a century and a half it has greeted the great of this and other nations; Lafayette and Lindbergh, Garibaldi and Eisenhower; and it has welcomed to these shores the humble and unknown. Before it have passed generations of immigrants, trudging toward their new homes in the teeming city or in the cities, farms and plains which stretched westward to the Pacific. The Hall tells the colorful and significant story of civic administration in an American metropolis and preserves the deeds of good men and bad who shaped the American political tradition: De Witt Clinton, father of the Erie Canal; "Boss" Tweed, the evil genius of machine politics, and the able and flamboyant "Little Flower", Fiorello La Guardia, among scores of others no less memorable.

City Hall has been described as a living museum of New York History, blending architectural beauty and historical significance in a combination rare in American public buildings. In the Hall are the offices of the Mayor and the President of the City Council, and the meeting rooms of the City Council and Board of Estimate. Here, too, is the famous Room No. 9, reserved for use of the press. Leading figures of American history who have been associated directly or indirectly with New York City are honored by sculpture and paintings in the Governor's Room and throughout the Hall. The Governor's Room on the second floor, serves as a museum displaying, among other items, a mahogany writing table used by Washington in the first days of his presidency, and arm chairs used by members of the first United States Senate during its sessions in New York.
