The historic resources of the Hudson Highlands were identified and evaluated based on a comprehensive inventory compiled by Scenic Hudson, Inc., a private not-for-profit environmental organization in the region. The Hudson Highlands were isolated as a multiple resource area because of its unique geographical, environmental, and historical characteristics which are readily distinguishable from the rest of the region.

The area is contained within 12 municipalities in five separate counties: the town of Fishkill and the city of Beacon in Dutchess County; the villages of Cornwall-on-Hudson, Highland Falls and Fort Montgomery and the towns of Cornwall and Highland in Orange County; the villages of Cold Spring and Nelsonville and the town of Philipstown in Putnam County; the town of Stony Point in Rockland County; and the town of Cortlandt in Westchester County. Its boundaries were determined by the sight lines from the Hudson River which are defined as the first ridge of the Hudson Highlands from the southern boundary of the city of Beacon, Dutchess County (although one property overlaps the city boundary) south to Annsville Creek, town of Cortlandt, Westchester County on the east side of the Hudson River and from the Mountain Creek, Cornwall-on-Hudson, Orange County south to the southern border of the town of Stony Point, Rockland County on the west side of the river.

A survey was conducted within the area in 1979 by a professional architectural historian under contract to Scenic Hudson, Inc. All structures which met a broad criteria of historical or architectural interest were then inventoried on Building/Structure Inventory forms issued by the New York State Historic Preservation Office with appropriate documentation, photographic coverage and mapping attached. Archeological sites were surveyed concurrently by a certified archeologist and eligible resources will be nominated at a future time. The inventory was placed on file in the State Historic Preservation Office in Albany, New York in the spring of 1981.

The inventory was reviewed by the State Historic Preservation Office staff and site inspections were made in the fall of 1981. In consultation with Scenic Hudson, Inc., a list of buildings, structures, districts, and sites which appeared to meet the criteria for listing on the National Register of Historic Places was prepared for study by the New York State Board for Historic Preservation. The sponsor's consultant, under the direction of State Historic Preservation Office staff, prepared a draft National Register nomination for the 56 individual properties and three historic districts which are described independently, in detail, on the inventory forms that follow. The final nomination was prepared after formal review and recommendation by the State review board.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

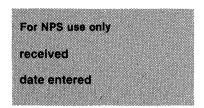

The Hudson Highlands Multiple Resource Area has a long and illustrious history the record of which began when Henry Hudson first explored the region in 1609 and logged an account of the awesome, spectacular landscape. For nearly four centuries hence the Highlands has continued to be perceived as a unique environment with outstanding scenic and historic qualities along a river internationally renowned for its beauty. The special goephysical qualities of the area have largely defined the character of its history and its architecture.

Because of the rugged mountainous landscape of the Hudson Highlands, frequently distinguished by steep rock faces ascending from the river's edge, settlement in the region was slow to develop. The Highlands were also a frustrating barrier for both land and water-transportation. The villages of Cornwall-on-Hudson and Fishkill-on-Hudson (now Beacon) are communities which were established during the eighteenth century at the northern terminus of the Highlands, and until well into the nineteenth century, they were accessible from the south only by the river or wandering inland roads and turnpikes. Railroads, winding their way along the river's edge, often filling the shoreline for a hold, brought regular transportation to the region in the 1850's. The Storm King Highway (1922) on the west side of the Hudson, the Bear Mountain Bridge Road (1923) on the east side, and the Bear Mountain Bridge (1924) connecting them, were the first roads to fully traverse the area.

The landscape did not lend itself to agricultural settlements or river trading. Military outposts were the earliest structures of notable proportions. West Point, the U.S. Military Academy (National Historic Landmark, 1966) was located in the Hudson Highlands for the strategic military position the mountainous barrier presented. During the Revolutionary War forts, redoubts and signal posts were erected throughout the Highlands as well as obstructions in the river itself. Significant historic resources associated with the American Revolution can be found in each community in the Hudson Highlands. The signal fires which gave Mount Beacon its name, the <a href="https://cheen.com/c at Fort Montgomery (National Historic Landmark, 1973), the battles of Fort Clinton and Fort Montgomery, and the many encampments of the Continental Army are just some of the events that occurred in the Hudson Highlands. The later expansion of the U.S. Military Academy contributed to the nineteenth century growth of the surrounding communities.

Cold Spring, Putnam County, grew as the result of the establishment of the West Point Foundry in 1817. By virtue of its location, accessible to upland iron mines and the military base at West Point, the foundry became one of the major producers of large guns and ammunition. However, this industrial village was an anomaly in the area which otherwise developed as a resort and opulent estate region capitalizing on the taste for picturesque environments during the mid-nineteenth century.

The Hudson Valley was the center of the romantic movement that began before the Civil War in America. The Hudson River School of painting is the best known product of this revival of interest in the natural landscape and pre-industrial life; however it was a pervasive movement that affected all aspects of art and society in the Hudson Valley including architecture, literature, recreation and tourism.

Many of the nineteenth century residences in the multiple resource area are significant for their association with the various picturesque styles, such as the Gothic, Italianate and Medieval revivals of the period. Renowned architects such as Alexander Jackson Davis, Richard Upjohn and Calvert Vaux are credited with the designs of houses in this nomination. The magnitude of the scenic landscape often inspired a comparison with the Rhine Valley in Germany. Some individuals took the comparison to heart and erected actual castles. Castle Rock in the vicinity of Garrison (listed on the National Register, 1977), Bannerman's Island, on an island near Beacon, Dick's Castle near Cold Spring, and the Frederick Osborn House near Garrison, are the most conspicuous examples of this "castle-on-the-Rhine" syndrome.

The Hudson Highlands attracted thousands of summer visitors fleeing the summer heat and unhealthy conditions of New York City for the clear air and vistas of the Highland region. Large hotels and smaller boarding houses dotted the mountain sides in Cornwall and Highland in Orange County. Guests travelled by boat and later by train. All the hotels are gone, but a boarding house and a fresh-air camp for city children represent this significant building type and historic period in the region. The Mount Beacon Incline Railway in Dutchess County offered an exciting vertical ride to a casino with a dramatic view of the river, the western Highlands and the city of Newburgh.

The attraction of the Hudson Highlands as a residential and resort area continued well into the twentieth century. Putnam County, on the eastern side of the river with direct passenger train access to New York City, developed as an elite suburban community with large architecturally distinguished estates. On the west side of the river, estate residences were juxtaposed with resorts on the north side of Storm King Mountain. The development of the Cornwall area accelerated with the completion of the Storm King Highway which was promoted with such development in mind. The southwestern part of the Highlands was owned exclusively by the Harriman family. In 1910, the Harrimans donated 10,000 acres to the state of New York towards the establishment It is significant as the first state park in New York as well as for its distinctive rustic stone architecture. Mountain Bridge, built by the Harriman family and later turned over to New York State brought thousands of motorists to the park and to the scenic roads (Route 218 and Route 6) cut out of the mountain sides to allow for spectacular views of the river and mountains.

The Hudson Highlands and the Hudson River flowing through them continue to inspire artists, poets and the public. This significant natural resource has been enhanced by the survival of significant historic resources which are associated with persons, places, events, and architectural fashions which are directly linked to those special qualities of the Highlands which have made the area unique in America.
