7. Description
good; altered; original site

The Pony Historic District is largely comprised of buildings and structures erected during the town's period of significance, 1876-1910. Pony's architecture is typical of many small mining towns in Montana. The town contains a variety of buildings and structures, including commercial, public, residential, religious and industrial. Most exhibit characteristics of vernacular styling. Several residences are outstanding examples of the Queen Anne type.

Commercial buildings are concentrated along Broadway Street. Examples include the Pony Hotel (1903), the Isdell Mercantile Company (ca. 1895-1899), the Pony Bar (ca. 1880-1895), and the Morris State Bank (1902). Typical details include parapets, large display windows, simple rectangular shape corresponding to lot size, and recessed entries. Older buildings such as the Pony Bar are generally of wood frame construction with horizontal siding.
and a false front. Most commercial buildings, however, feature brick veneer and brick-bearing wall construction. One structure, the Isdell Mercantile Company, features walls constructed of stone with a brick front, probably an indication of the difficulty and expense of building with brick in Pony prior to about 1900. A few of the buildings designed by architects exhibit Neo-Classical elements. The most notable is the Morris State Bank. Although it served public functions, because of its design and location the Fraternity Hall (1900) can be categorized as a commercial building.

Public buildings vary. Probably the most outstanding public building is the Pony School (1902), an imposing two story brick structure. As with the bank, the school was designed by a professional architect, and exhibits some Neo-Classical ornamentation. The Pony Jail (1900) features thick stone walls and low, squat massing.

Pony's residences are situated throughout the Original Townsite and the additions. These include a variety of types, ranging from small wood frame houses to large dwellings, some with brick veneers. Nearly all have elements of the Queen Anne style, most predominantly ornamented porches and gable ends shingled in a variety of patterns. Examples of small homes include the Box family residence and the dwelling on the corner of Jefferson and Isdell streets (ca. 1900). In Pony's Schmalhausen addition the predominant residences feature a four-sided square or rectangular shape topped by a hipped roof. In nearby Butte, another mining town, such houses are termed "worker's cottages." Mid-sized dwellings with a brick veneer include the Crews residence (1901) and the Schreiner residence (1900-1901). Large dwellings include the Isdell home (ca.1876), two of the Morris Houses (1902 and ca. 1877-1895) and the Adkins (1900-1902), Carmin (ca.1898-1899), and Reel (1902) residences. The latter three are outstanding examples of the Queen Anne style, and feature such characteristics as irregular massing, polygonal bays, elaborate ornamentation, textured wall surfaces, and turrets. Large houses built around the turn of the century or later are of frame construction with brick veneers.
Pony also contains two churches, the Presbyterian (ca. 1894-1896) and the Episcopal (ca. 1907-1908). Although the Presbyterian church is built of wood and the Episcopal of pressed concrete block, both are distinguished by elements of the Gothic style, most notably large pointed-arch windows.

Industrial buildings in Pony are varied. All of these are in some way related to mining and milling. The most outstanding group are the structures at the Hundred Stamp millsite. Buildings at this site include a large, two story brick office building, a stone foundation for a hundred stamp mill, and a small wood frame hydroelectric generating plant with a Pelton wheel in place (all built ca.1900). Other industrial buildings in Pony include the Morris-Elling Mill (1883) as well as some other small buildings and structures.

Non-contributing buildings within the boundaries of the historic district include a variety of modern frame and log houses, mobile homes, and compromised historic buildings, mostly commercial and residential. Although these buildings are readily apparent, they do not greatly detract from the character and integrity of the district as a whole. Contributing buildings predominate, and these are of such integrity that the dominant visual appearance of the district continues to be that of a turn-of-the-century Montana mining town.

8. Significance

1876-1910; architecture, commerce, industry, politics/government

The built environment of Pony is historically and architecturally significant because it contains buildings and structures which depict the commercial, industrial, governmental, as well as architectural aspects of a small Montana mining town during the late 19th and early 20th centuries (1875-1910). For example, Pony has a variety of commercial buildings, such as a bank, a hotel, an office building, a store, and a boarding hall, which depict the evolution of the town's commercial life from earlier, less affluent stages, to later years when the community thrived on a booming mining economy. Governmental structures—a school and jail—also reflect this trend, particularly during the early years of the 1900s, when Pony reached its peak as a mining center. Industrial structures, especially stamp mills and other mining-related buildings, depict the town's mining history. Mining developments were directly related to Pony's economic fortunes. Pony's architecture demonstrates the town's evolution as well. Generally, early buildings were of simple log or frame construction; few were of brick. Later buildings, however, were more sophisticated, with stone foundations and brick walls. Styles, too, were eventually more sophisticated in later years. The town contains several examples of Queen Anne dwellings, and some of the larger commercial and governmental buildings feature characteristics of Neo-Classicism.

on the north edge of the Eldorado Addition; then proceed west along the edge of the Eldorado Addition to the point of beginning.

The boundary of the Pony Historic District encompasses those areas within the Pony Townsite and adjacent areas, primarily the W.W. Morris Residential complex and the Hundred Stamp Millsite, which have a predominance of structures which are of primary significance or which contribute to the significance of the Pony Historic District as evaluated by the 1985 inventory of Pony. The Pony Historic District includes commercial, residential, public, and industrial buildings which depict the history of the town during its mining era.
