DESCRIPTION

The C.P. Quattlebaum House was constructed ca. 1855, and was purchased in 1887 by Cephas Perry Quattlebaum, who extensively renovated it at that time; the house has integrity from the 1887 remodeling.(1) The house is a two-story, T-plan, cross-gable roofed, frame, weatherboard-clad residence with a two-story, projecting, polygonal bay on the right (northeast) elevation.

The facade is asymmetrical and features a two-story projecting bay on the right side. At the first story level is a one-story, projecting polygonal bay with a conical roof and four shuttered windows. The second story of this bay has centered double one-over-one shuttered windows. The gable has boxed eaves with returns and a heart-shaped cartouche. This bay was added to the residence by Quattlebaum ca. 1887. The side-gable wing is dominated by a two-tiered porch which wraps the left (southeast) elevation. This porch is composed of six bays at each story. The posts at the first story have turned upper sections and square lower sections. The posts at the second story are chamfered; sawn corner brackets are at the top of each post and turned balustrades are at both levels. The facade of this wing has two bays. The first story fenestration is AB, where A = a single six-over-six window with louvered shutters and B = a single door entrance. A peaked gable with scalloped and saw-toothed shingles caps the two-tiered porch. There is a two-story, gable-roofed rear appendage. A single brick chimney pierces the roof at the cross gable and the foundation is brick pier with infill. The interior also possesses integrity from the 1887 remodeling.

There is one outbuilding included in the nomination. A smokehouse, which dates from the latter part of the nineteenth century, is located southwest of the house. This small rectangular building is weather-board-clad and has an overhanging gable-front roof with returns and angle braces.

SIGNIFICANCE

AREA OF SIGNIFICANCE: Architecture/Local History

LEVEL OF SIGNIFICANCE: L (FOR OFFICE USE ONLY)

The C.P. Quattlebaum House is locally significant as an example of a late nineteenth century residence. Distinctive features of the house include the two-tiered wrap-around porch with sawn brackets and the scalloped and saw-toothed shingles in the gable. It is also significant for its association with C.P. Quattlebaum. Quattlebaum was a prominent Horry County lawyer and politician for over fifty years and was the town's first mayor. His law office is included in the nomination for the Conway Multiple Resource Area, as is the house of his son, Paul Quattlebaum (see individual inventory forms).
